Envirochemie is taking the effects of the coronavirus pandemic seriously and is still here for you

The health of our employees, business partners and the general public are very important to us

We are taking the global health crisis caused by the coronavirus (SARS-CoV-2) very seriously and are doing our bit to slow down the spread of the virus. We have informed our employees about protective measures and established rules for safe working within the team and also with business partners. This is all based on instructions from the authorities and the recommendations of the Robert Koch Institute.

You can still contact us as usual

However, we also bear the responsibility of keeping Envirochemie's business operations running. We are therefore switching to video and telephone conferencing in order to stay in contact within the team and with our business partners and push ahead with any agreed projects. You can still get in touch with us using the normal contact details.

We are still working to our delivery schedules

We are still working on contractually agreed projects, taking the important protective measures into consideration. Some of the Envirochemie team is doing this from home. We are doing everything we can to ensure that all of our services can be completed on time and our products and services continue to be available as normal. With this in mind, we are especially putting an emphasis on transparent communications with you and will therefore be updating you constantly on the current developments at our company. If supply bottlenecks are likely to occur, we will inform you in good time.

Our Service Team is here for you

We have organised ourselves so that we can carry on supporting you with our range of services. We will arrange service calls taking into consideration all necessary protective measures. Please also inform us about the internal protective measures your company is taking. You can call us as usual or send us an email (tel. +49 (0)6154 6998 100 or service@envirochemie.com).

Let's look after each other. Stay safe!
